Danielle Lord, PhD | Leadership & Learning Development leader

“A well-developed and committed workforce is an amazing asset, which can yield a tremendous competitive advantage when utilized properly”

As a small business owner and the principal of Archetype Learning Solutions, Danielle focuses her leadership development efforts on small business and individuals because everybody should have access to leadership development.

Prior to joining the Port of Seattle, Danielle was in the role of Chief Learning Officer for the State of Washington. During that time, she developed a robust process of quality assurance for State approved courses, an enterprise-wide mentoring program, and led the statewide leadership development implementation, securing three million in development funding. Prior to joining the State of Washington, Danielle designed, developed, and managed Physician Leadership Development for Providence Health and Services, a five-state, 75,000 employee health system. In addition, she has been a faculty member at Brandman University since 2008, teaching over 17 different graduate level courses. She has also consulted for multiple organizations, and developed over 50 courses for organizations of all sizes. Danielle earned her PhD in Leadership Theory in 2007 from Capella University.

In her spare time Danielle enjoys antiquing, gardening, and wine. She lives in Auburn with her husband Stephen, with their two cats – both called “kitten,” and has two adult children. She also keeps very busy with two other small businesses: Dinners in the Dining Room – lifestyle blog and shop and Dress the Table, vintage china, crystal, silver, and linen rentals.
